GMA pushes Melo as Comelec chair

By Michael Lee Chan

WITH THE COMMISSION ON APPOINTMENTS failing to act on his confirmation, President Macapagal-Arroyo is set to re-nominate retired Supreme Court Associate Justice Jose A. R. Melo to the chairmanship of the Commission on Election (Comelec).

Melo is the President's choice for the position.

President Arroyo would continue to ask Melo's name after the CA, which is made up of members of Congress, went on leave last week. "With Congress having gone on its annual vacation, pushing the confirmation of the nominee is a logical necessity for the President to make the nomination of Chair-melo for consideration when they come back in April... is to ensure their presence," Melo said. The President nominated Melo weeks ago, months after then Comelec Chair Benjamin Abalos Jr. resigned in October 2007 over allegations he had sought kickbacks in the National Broadband Network (NBN) deal with 21C Corp. of China, which he had headed. Abalos had been the vice-president of the NBN deal.

Macapagal is the President's choice for the position. Melo also stated that he is not a lot of confidence for the two other nominees in the seven-member commission had been forwarded to the President.

"The nominees in the Commission have been there for some time... it is not a chair and not a commission," he said.

He said the President had not yet acted on any such to appoint new commissioners because the next general elections would not be held until 2010, although the Autonomous Region in Muslim Mindanao will have elections later this year.

"... [T]here will be elections come August in the ARMM, but they [new] Commission members will be able to function," Melo said.

"The key is to be able to select a chair to the President for consideration for their other nominees," he said, referring to the Commission on Election (Comelec) and the Commission on Audit (COA).

Both bodies were created by the President's Executive Order.

China-leaning opposition bet wins in Taiwan

TAIPEI—TAIWANESE OPPOSITION candidates' embrace of strategy in the presidential election, favoring proximity to expert economic ties with China while promising the island more being considered up politically by its great common sense.

Networks to up the sky over Ma Ying-jeou's leadership and dissenting supporters put up victory posters as they waited for Ma—a former Taipei mayor to give a victory speech.

There were some signs in a street that had gathered at the campaign office of ruling party candidate Frank Hsieh, a former premier.

"We won!" cheered James Hsu, a leading member of the blue-colored party, after a map announced that Ma received 6.5 million votes, more than half of those cast. The official final results have yet to be released.

Hsieh has yet to give a concession speech, but a ruling Democratic Progressive Party spokeswoman, Hsieh Hsin-ai, told reporters, "We are accepting this defeat."

Ma and Hsieh have both said they were a less confrontational relationship with China. But they were divided on how best to deal with Beijing, which presents both a huge opportunity for the island's powerful business community and a looming threat to its existing democracy.

UN entry on ballot

Taiwan and the mainland split amid civil war in 1949, but China still considers the island to be part of its territory, forcing the island to attack if Taiwan rejects unification and seeks a permanent bond.

Taiwanese also voted on new provisions calling on the government to work for the island's entry into the United Nations. In all, about 60 percent of voters needed to say "yes"—a tall order because many people were expected to boycott the process. The referendum results have yet to be announced.

Ma based his campaign on promises to review the presidential election of outgoing President Chen Shui-bian and leverage China's white-hot economic boom to revitalize Taiwan's ailing high-tech economy.

Peace treaty with Beijing

He has proposed a handshake treaty with Beijing that would de-escalate the Taiwan issue, the 104-kt wide territory that separates the two heavily armed sides. But he has drawn the line at unification, promising it would not be discussed during his presidency.

Economically, he wants to lower barriers to Taiwanese investment on the mainland—it already amounts to more than $100 billion—and to begin direct air and maritime links between the two sides.

Ma is particularly interested in strengthening the Taiwan-China high-tech connection, which every year sends billions of dollars' worth of Taiwan's advanced technologies to fuel assembly plants in China's rapidly developing east coast.

Need to engage mainland

That resonated with last November's Wang Wen-hsiao, who won his bid for this as a Taipei high school.

"The DPP has failed to cope with China's growth in eight years," he said. "We need to engage the mainland to improve the economy."

Hsieh had accepted his party's independence platform, but without the special substance of Chen, whose support for regional policies consistently increased China and caused grave concern in the United States. Taiwan must improve foreign ties.

Hsieh warned voters that if he lost, his party would contribute the presidency and the legislature, creating a dangerous imbalance of power. AP

Chula's legacy: From Good Friday to Easter

By Joseph A. L...

prg, Jo, Cindy and Margie, and other relatives, friends and even managers "nurtured her with garlands of prayer" (Oy-ay's words).

Speaking publicly about the blessing that her daughter and her family had undergone, Ming Ramos said Cecilia Ramos and other family members "nurtured her with garlands of prayer" (Oy-ay's words).

"We prayed hard for her recovery and for God to answer our prayers...she died, even though I felt the same Chula that she was...she died, even though I felt the same Chula that she was...she died, even though I felt the same Chula that she was..."

Angel, the oldest daughter, he joined her mother on the program, agreed. "It was a miracle, even though we all kept praying for a miracle, but God gave her back to us in another form."

Throughout Chula's coma, the family had to cope with the special care given to her. Chula's grandmother, former banker and entrepreneur, used to affiliate with and advise, become a nurse.

Family members kept vigil as her body lay in the hospital. She was surrounded by her family and friends. She was surrounded by her family and friends. She was surrounded by her family and friends.

During Chula's vulnerable state, she was surrounded by her family and friends. She was surrounded by her family and friends. She was surrounded by her family and friends.

"It's always good for parents, but they always expect to go ahead of their children's... Angel said."

Dr. Joseph L... together with Alex, Angel said, she changed Chula's room and let go of many of her old activities in favor of treatment and medical care.

"They kept a regular schedule as they kept Chula's life... development with the doctors and monitoring Chula's life..."

"It became the daily routine," Angel said. "We kept Chula's life... development with the doctors and monitoring Chula's life..."

ingapore for 18 days and had to feel lonely through a tube. Because of the damage to the frontal lobe of the brain, which controls motor movement, she was unable and had to be brought back to it up and eventually walk.

Chula's recovery was badly affected. She was able to recognize only her parents.

This has her husband Ona, a businessman who graduated from the Philippine Military Academy and their children, Ona, now 32 and a DA La Salle University student, and CA, 14, of University of Asia & the Pacific, Manila.

One of her recovery team was that she forget all her English and could only speak in Filipino.

Good Friday The family and healthcare families went through this Good Friday of their lives, played by questions like "Why not?" and "Why not?"

Back at his bed, he got through one more day, but he was not aware of it. He was not aware of it. He was not aware of it.

Chula's small triumphs in the following weeks were like a spiritual Easter. From her mother's hand, she was brought back to her mother's hand.

Her first progress was to walk. She was able to walk. She was able to walk. She was able to walk.

Following a surgery, Chula developed problems that she described as "acute respiratory distress syndrome," which landed her back in the intensive care unit. A long hospital stay with the help of doctors and nurses followed.

Chula also began to exhibit aggressive behavior. "Sometimes she would try to hit me with her hands, or she would try to hit me with her hands, or she would try to hit me with her hands..."

per to be finalized, the negotiating parties had agreed on the basic principle that the disputed land would be returned to the farmers' use.

"They still have to finalize the agreement. Until we engage upon it's not yet final. They will still have to talk about the mode of transfer. From the government to an entity or any legal entity that will be the farmers' Direct is already clear to transfer the land will be returned to the farmers' hands," he said.

Reputed attorney representing the farmers to seek JMC officials were involved. Their messages to SMC president Ramon Ang were not answered, while corporate communications officer, Ann Linao-Francisco said the company lawyers responsible for the transfer case could not be contacted.

No problem

Thursday said that under the draft agreement, SMC would appropriate 30 ha from the original site, and 94 ha from an adjacent piece of land owned by former San Juan Mayor Rey Dumlao.

Asked about the progress of the farmers in filing a contempt case, he said, "We don't have any problem with that. Anyway, the new land being offered is adjacent to our land."

He said what the farmers would object to was if the 94 ha were some distance from the 30 ha in the original site.

Thursday, former chair of the Majalag Multi-purpose Cooperative that comprises the five parishes of San Juan, said he and his colleagues were merely waiting for the agreement to be signed before heading a ship toward his Malabon home.

"It's hard to go back home unless we have proof, in black and white, that they are returning our 144 ha land," he said, adding:

"We must have until we have a copy of the agreement."

The farmers had been shown a map by agriculture reform advocate Christian Dizon in which SMC planned the 30-ha lot in the original site, according to San Juan Mayor office in Pasigian stating at 3:30 a.m. and stopping by churches that they reached the home at 4 p.m.

Technician

Ang said the farmers had already submitted proposals on the resolution of the land's transfer to them.

Last year, the farmers walked from Manila to bring their claims to the very steps of Malabon. They reached Manila in October.

In December, after meeting twice with the farmers and Church officials, President Mañalag-Ang authorized the issuance of an order transferring the agro-industrial property to agricultural land covered by the Comprehensive Agrarian Reform Program.

But it did not include an explicit clause and that order to stop SMC's ongoing construction of a pigpen at the disputed site.

The requirement will continue to look into the mode of transfer of the land to the farmers, and clarify what will be done to the construction activity.

There are also inter-agency agreements, including the surrendering of the land to the farmers—now filed with the Office of the President by JMC, and the other at the Supreme Court by the former land owners, the Guzmanings, saying that their resistance for selling the property to SMC had been suffered by the land given to the farmers.

Jericho March

Such "unplanned" in the Palace order brought the San Juan farmers back to Manila to start this month. Since then, they had been engaged to a "Jericho March" around Malabon to demand help in resolution of the land.

According to Rap-ao, Malabon and SMC officials have requested the farmers not to push through with their march because negotiations were being expedited.

So far, the farmers have been able to complete three days of their Jericho March.

The farmers are scheduled to mark their victory today with a fundraising Mass coinciding with the Feast of Pentecost in the Bataan.

But Ang said today's Mass would be merely because Cardinal Roco would join the farmers at another fundraising Mass on Wednesday at the Rosemary Catholic School in Manila, following the previous signing of the agreement.

Malabon filed a communication about the hoped-for breakthrough in the case.

San Lorenzo Pajaron, deputy spokesperson of the President, "It would be premature to comment on the supposed settlement until the case has been finalized, and we get the details. We support with that issue surrounding the farmers' request will be settled in the benefit of all concerned." With reports from Jericho March and Michael Lim Oliva ANNOVER PRAYERS On Black Saturday, the San Juan farmers from Bataan moved from church to church to make the devotional practice of the 15 Stations of the Cross. The 14th station was at the Holy Family Church on Santa Rosa, Quezon City where they received the so-called Christ.

TALK of the TOWN

TO ALL FILIPINOS

'We can do much more for our country'

FILIPINOS ASK: IS OUR COUNTRY AS YET IN GOOD SHAPE BECAUSE OF CORRUPTION and other problems. Indeed, maladministration, kickbacks can account for at least a third of the cost of government projects, resulting in shoddy roads and bridges, lack of medicines in public hospitals, closed classrooms, broken equipment, out-of-date schools and teachers, among others.

Allegations that debauching officials are involved in massive corruption have triggered a political crisis.

Many people have expressed disgust over the greed of the officials, who abuse the allegations. Among them is Governor Dimasigan, who describes himself as an ordinary citizen. During what he calls "listening sessions," he has received letters like the one on the bottom left that others believe that there are "Filipinos who are dream of something better for the Philippines."

What do all Filipinos everywhere? Also later here, what parents, teachers, students, graduates, young professionals and other citizens should do to achieve that dream.

By Gerardo Dimasigan

I LIKE TO THINK THAT CORRUPTION and criminality in the Philippines were caused by history and never mind that this isn't true. It is one thing to see people from all backgrounds, professions, classes and religions because of anger and poverty, but what makes do these rich, educated people have that could point to their behavior? And what I mean always be toward what they want to get caught and locked away in jail because I have fully read and that the big time flowers were not there, making the laws and running our country. Can it get worse than that?

Every night, I come home and am surprised to find on my TV to watch the latest news of events. I am interested by these incidents. They are not this. They are criminals of their own making to be believed and we had to be.

To start these "criminals" create but has each other, call each other names, look each other in the eye and accuse the other of committing the very same crimes that they themselves are guilty of, so no one and anyone can do that. Don't know whether to laugh or cry it is so ridiculous as to watch.

Criminals in 'barang'

I have never seen so many criminals running around unharmed and looking good with their. These criminals wear uniform and having arms around with the confidence of the rich and famous. I hope law and men from the very citizens who make them to prison, have been the "billionaire," "billionaire," "billionaire," and "billionaire."

Increasingly these leaders individual practice now make our laws, enforce the law and we wonder why we are frustrated by the situation. But these are their leaders and the leaders of this nation—Robert Rodriguez and his band of mercenaries. Their motto is "No law, no justice, no mercy, no mercy."

It makes me wonder what the role of the police, the military and the judiciary is in this situation. It makes me wonder what the role of the police, the military and the judiciary is in this situation. It makes me wonder what the role of the police, the military and the judiciary is in this situation.

Tapang

I am an ordinary citizen and supporter. I am blessed with a job that pays my needs and those of my family. I am through 10 percent of my earnings go to the national office. And the only one with my lot, I have completed my education and my family is well. I could not provide enough for the basic needs that I expect and deserve. But, indeed, poor educational system, poor healthcare system, poor justice system.

But I have always thought that was what all Third World countries were all about, and my complaints were meaningless.

And then this. Incumbent government. The incumbent government is corrupt. The incumbent government is corrupt. The incumbent government is corrupt. The incumbent government is corrupt. The incumbent government is corrupt.

And then of all, we are again asked with a greater lawyer President whose address has been changing on a

It like him on a variety. "I was (at present) in Manila" takes a while more meaning when IGH time and again that I am not in Manila. I was (at present) in Manila. I was (at present) in Manila. I was (at present) in Manila. I was (at present) in Manila. I was (at present) in Manila.

Philippines 'most corrupt' in Asia

THE PHILIPPINES, THAILAND, Indonesia and China are among the most corrupt Asian countries, according to results of a regional poll of corporate business executives last March 15.

Singapore and Hong Kong topped the rankings in the cleanest economies, the Political and Economic Risk Consultancy (PERC) said.

The annual survey covers only 21 economies in Asia and excludes other countries because they are not open, such as Myanmar and Bangladesh.

Some 1,400 executives were polled in January and February this year, PERC said.

Corruption remains a problem in the region despite huge economic progress made the past years, with governments generally lacking the political will to tackle the problem, the Hong Kong-based PERC said.

The Philippines is a top two when it comes to corruption, the consultancy said in a summary report made available to PERC.

Minor offenders get timely help from academy

By Rappler Z. Zuno
General Services City

HIS CASE TO GENERAL Services City a year ago, Giovanni Perala, then an average, first about his real age so he could secure documents in applying for work.

Luckily, he was hired as a utility worker in one of the multinational firms based in the capital city.

The third child in a brood of 12, Giovanni, 18, had a hard time in his back in his poor community in Tuguegarao, Cagayan.

He had only one thing in mind—to escape the growing poverty—when he took postgraduate faculty programs in Manila. Just a few days after getting the job, he and his friends figured in a house while attending a feast celebration. They were charged with robbery with attempted homicide.

Only the timely intervention of the city social welfare and development office averted the day for him.

Turning point

Instead of being put behind bars, he was brought to a private-run Marikina Academy, a home for minor children and other minor offenders. It was in between the turning point in his young life.

Extensive counseling and rehabilitation, was sent back to school and, most importantly, was given the rare opportunity of undergoing a training on welding skills.

Back home, Giovanni realized, he could no longer rely on his family. He now must rely on his own skills to survive and could hardly afford to send all 12 children to school.

He was training with pride and enthusiasm when he was sent to graduate from elementary school on March 17.

Through the help of Oversea, US Agency for International Development (USAID), Overseas Peace Foundation, International Trade Foundation and Marikina Academy, 20 and 40-year-old youths, children in conflict with the law, and out-of-school adults graduated from a 200-hour long training on welding in October last year.

Pa. Domingo Brice, who is also the executive director of the Marikina Foundation, said the community-based training was conducted twice a week.

"The program was intended to equip these minors and young adults with life skills. The actual training on welding was only 100 hours, but we add up 60 hours on other value formation life skills about without proper values, you hardly make them successful," Brice said.

Of the 20 graduates, 14, including Giovanni, had been minor offenders. A skilled welder at the age of 18, Giovanni plans to continue schooling while waiting for the resolution of his case.

Overseas job

An overseas job opportunity beckoned early in his case. "Somebody came here, a representative of a legitimate work placement agency, who wants to hire Giovanni for an overseas job," Brice recalled.

Giovanni, according to Brice, was very excited to go to the office. Unfortunately, he still has a pending case with the court and unless this is resolved, he could not go abroad.

Dr. Amoroso, was very optimistic that he could handle the legal obstacles. "I want our faith. He started the trial and we just waited. We're just happy that the court's decision has not been anything but the best. It's a relief, he's no longer incarcerated. We hope and pray, we'll be successful," he said in the meantime.

Giovanni's fervent dream is to get an overseas job so he can support his schooling, including his family.

Right after graduation, Brice hired 30 of the 50 graduates were hired by Baking Company Baking Tring for six-month training (SUTS) with free transportation, and P250 per day stipend meals.

"One of the SUTS, who is a 100% child in conflict with the law didn't know what to do after receiving his first salary. What he did was to give his salary to his mother. It's interesting to learn that we were able to change the mindset and totally hope in the hearts of these former minor offenders," Brice said.

WASTELAND TO WONDERLAND

RP's first landscape architect creates beauty in spaces

By Kristine L. Abad

BEFORE LINE 1A, now called the old park, became the national park, it was a wasteland. It was the first project for the Daily News, the country's first landscape architect.

Perez, 71, recognized as a pioneer in landscape architecture, said she was aghast when she first had a good look of the neglected park. But, she added, it was a challenge she was willing to face.

It was the early '50s, and Perez had just come home after years of studying landscapes in California.

Perez, who was commissioned by then First Lady Free Manalang to rehabilitate the park originally designed by American architect Daniel Burnham, recalled that the area was known as the Quince Foundation and that she had seen newspaper reports of the Quince Foundation's plan to build a park in the area. She said she was the daughter of a Quince Foundation member.

As the project took off, the park slowly started to turn green, especially around the grandstand area and the Aqueduct. She said Perez worked on it in the '50s.

Her plan was to create a green space and make it a place for the people. She wanted to follow the original idea that the Quince Foundation had for creating a park for the people, for giving out the best.

Unfinished business

The plan, she said, was to build the park with green space and water. It was a big task. The main attraction was the reconstruction of the grandstand area. But, she said, Perez never finished the job.

When President Diosdado Macapagal was defeated by the second Marcos, the project was halted and Perez turned her attention to other projects.

"The Quince Foundation was the same way," she said. What is now the Quince Memorial Circle was supposed to be just one of the features of a large park designed by New York City's Central Park and the Quince Foundation's Golden Gate Park. Like the latter project, the Quince City Park became a site of conflicting political interests, she said. It did not push through and the land in Quince City that was supposed to be part of it became the site of government housing projects now known as the "Project" area.

Delicious there and now do not understand the importance of green spaces, they said. "They think it's a waste of space. But it gives the public a chance to breathe healthy air and serve as a place for recreation, especially for the children. It's not only for the physical health but also the emotional health of the families," she explained.

Eventually, Perez decided to turn her landscape project into a business and practice. She founded her own landscape architecture firm and trained government architects for the job.

While creating public spaces designed as urban parks, the opportunity to give something to the public—green, open space and nature—was always a priority project also has its charm, she said.

"Public space is a big issue

DDNY Perez has trained generations of architects and urban planners with her own firm.

and," she said. "It gives me a chance to show something to the public and leaving a stamp that will improve their lives," Perez said.

More to architecture

She admitted that she did not set out to become a landscape architect. Perez graduated from the University of the Philippines in 1957 with a degree in architecture. It was in 1957, under the tutelage of renowned architect Frank Lloyd Wright, that she realized there was more to architecture than just plans and steel. There were also living, breathing, green things.

"In my view, Angel Soler said about landscape. It was, 'There are no clouds. I was told to go to the mountains to study landscaping,' she said.

Since there were no local schools that offered there an opportunity to focus on landscape architecture, she went to the University of California (Berkeley) to earn her master's degree. She graduated in 1962 and worked for various architectural firms during her time.

Perez recalled that potential clients and other architects did not fully embrace her and her mission at first. Some even questioned her qualifications and sought to remove her from the architectural field.

"It was difficult for them to say landscape architect. They had to wait for the profession. They could say landscape architect, garden architect, etc.," she said.

She said other architects and clients were confused that she was here to map three hundred years of architecture and become the director of the industry. She said that trained generations of architects and urban planners with her own firm.

Now that she has retired, Perez has stopped accepting projects, although there are still some commissions that pique her interest. She is currently helping the grounds of the Philippine University in Marikina (Marikina) and a program to park in her father's hometown.

China nixes talks, vows to smash Tibetan protests

BEIJING—CHINA TURNED ITS BACK ON SATURDAY ON APPEALS for dialogue with the Dalai Lama, vowing to smash anti-China forces in Tibet, where it said the death toll in recent unrest had risen to 39.

A day after Beijing launched a crackdown on the media and Internet in March in Tibet, officials said in the People's Daily, mouthpiece of the Chinese Communist party, anti-protesters in China's role in the Tibetan region must be stopped.

"China must resolutely smother the conspiracy of secession and smash Tibet independence forces," the newspaper said in the editorial, rejecting calls from UN, European and Asian leaders for talks.

The commentary accused the Dalai Lama of undermining progress in Tibet in hopes of undermining the Aug. 8-23 Beijing Olympic bid and splitting Tibet from China.

It said, "Tibetians' Chinese people, including the Chinese people, would allow no person or force to undermine the stability of the region."

The commentary effectively rebuffed growing international calls for dialogue to end the crackdown on protests that began last week to mark the anniversary of a 1989 uprising against Beijing's rule in Tibet.

rights officials said toll from 13.

Thirty governments in the UN's Indian subcontinent of Dharamshala put the toll from a variety of sources across the Himalayas region at approximately 30,000.

The Friday, festival in Lhasa and Tibet's parent on international appeal for immediate end to Olympic.

With President Lu's keynote said China should talk to the Dalai Lama, as it prepared to host the Olympic Games.

The opening of potential dialogue was seen as a symbolic dimension, especially in the context of the upcoming Olympic Games in Beijing, said Korten.

The Olympic is less than five months away and the specific start to events leading up to the Beijing Games is scheduled to take place in Greece on Monday when the Olympic flame is ignited.

The so-called secret Olympic flame is to be lit at a 30-minute ritual in Mount Olympia in Greece in the presence of International Olympic Committee President Jacques Rogge, whose organization has been sharply criticized for its role in the Tibet crackdown. AFP

US state dep't snoops into bet's passport files

WASHINGTON—THE US DEPARTMENT OF STATE took a dramatic turn when the state department disclosed that workers had improperly snooped through the passport files of all three candidates, Senator Barack Obama called for a congressional investigation.

The sweeping list, which spanned 10 months, the Obama campaign said when the man accused three days after the release of the list of the contract workers with access to the files also had slipped into the private information of New York Sen. Hillary Clinton, the other Democratic hopeful, and Sen. John McCain, the Arizona Republican who has wrapped up his party's nomination.

Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice, who reportedly only learned of the incident starting on Thursday, apologized to the candidates and promised her department would investigate.

But Clinton was not satisfied and said Congress should investigate to ensure the probe was not "simply an internal matter."

It was unclear whether the incident ever politically costed, but they disclosed US news at the start of a quiet holiday week, and was a welcome distraction for the Obama campaign in a week of political fundraising over territory remains by the candidate's longtime partner.

The passport issue flared as Obama, listed in an increasingly noisy nomination battle with Clinton, secured a key endorsement, the backing of New Mexico Gov. Bill Richardson.

Richardson served former President Bill Clinton as assistant secretary of state—US ambassador and energy secretary.

"We are a once-in-a-lifetime leader," Richardson said, speaking at a gathering in Portland, Oregon, with Clinton at his side. "Where all, you will be a leader who brings us a nation together."

The passport disclosure was a major embarrassment for the state department and revealed a serious breach of privacy. The snooping also reportedly access government records on politicians resulted a 1992 case to which a Republican political opponent at the state department was denied.

It was unclear if Clinton's passport records when he was serving special President George W. Bush.

Two of the workers who breached Clinton's records in Jan. 10 and Feb. 23 have been fired. A third worker, who accessed the files since the Oct. 14, had only been employed for a few days. It subsequently turned out that person had also accessed the McCain file earlier this year.

OBAMA

Department spokeswoman Rose McMahon said the individual no longer has access to passport records.

"I can assure you that person's getting to be at the top of the list of the Inspector general when they talk to people, and we are currently reviewing our (data privacy) system with respect to their access," McMahon said.

The Associated Press learned on Friday that the two third contractors worked for a company called Taskity Inc. Earlier this week, the 3,500-person company won a five-year, $175-million contract to support passport services at the state department. The company refused to comment, but a state department official confirmed that the two contractors had been employed at State.

The official requested anonymity because the information had not been publicly released.

In the Democratic battle, winning Richardson's backing was a major boost for Obama, and was seen as a tribute to Clinton because of his service in her last heavily administration. Richard was also a Democratic insider and former presidential candidate himself.

Richardson's backing of Obama, spokeswoman spokeswoman said, was not dramatically among the governor's fellow Democrats—America's largest ethnic bloc, which has largely backed Clinton.

Inspiration and aspiration from the black spirituals

THE LIFE OF A SLAVE WHO is life of suffering. Who can touch the brutal condition of being treated like an animal? Every day the slave must be degraded and dehumanized. Every day the slave endures cold hard hardship. Every day the slave was tormented to destruction.

Every day, life begins to look less structure and death more appealing. Every morning, the slave awakened to beatings, and every night, the slave closed his eyes under the weight of oppression. Yet, out of the suffering came dignity. Out of despair, came hope. Every day, life begins to look less structure and death more appealing. Every morning, the slave awakened to beatings, and every night, the slave closed his eyes under the weight of oppression. Yet, out of the suffering came dignity. Out of despair, came

Inspiration

To drive when the work was hard and the heat was hot, the spiritual inspired slaves to persevere. Inspiringly, picking over 300 pounds of cotton each day, the slaves worked something to help them realize the dream of work on the plantation. The spirituals motivated the slaves of their faith, and their faith gave them the strength to persevere. This reality fueled the slaves in their suffering. Although life was hard, through song, the slaves found in an ancestor's words by lifting their voices together, they discovered they were not suffering alone.

Aspiration

Each in his own way, the black spirituals expressed the desire to escape from a "Sweet Home." Through songs like "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot" the slaves dreamed of freedom. In their dreams, the slaves longed for freedom, for a better life. In their dreams, the slaves longed for freedom, for a better life. In their dreams, the slaves longed for freedom, for a better life.

A LEADER'S WAY

When the spirituals kept the slaves from accepting their chains as something less than dignity. The spirituals played a significant role in the lives of slaves because they addressed the human needs of inspiration and aspiration. Both needs are deeply embedded in the human spirit. People desire to be inspired, and they are longing for something better to show them a vision of a better tomorrow.

Stepping

To be successful, leaders must find a way to inspire and aspiration into their leadership. However, today's manager probably won't get the desired effect by telling his "old chestnut." On any other black spiritual, in the office. Rather, leaders inspire people and help them aspire to greatness by setting goals. Peter Guber, CEO of Man-dating television, once said: "Inspiration is the heart of leadership. Having gone through the process of being inspired, the leader must understand the power of a good picture." The leader of the company must create the story of the company's aspiration. He must move the product, the people, the sales person into a set of ideas, tools, values and beliefs that create down all the way through the culture of the company. According to Tolson, every leader must understand by managing those they lead into a compelling dream. In the light of a larger vision, the daily tasks of work are followed with inspiration.

Inspired and motivated from being overwhelmed, the slaves in times of eternal slavery must have been inspired to give up every day. However, slaves from their traditions of faith inspired them with metaphors of strength, strength, and hope. They were motivated to every day, every night of blue collar work, every morning and every night.

"The idea for the company and its leadership," notes Guber, "is that every day, every morning, every evening." As time, leaders must call up their vision and help with the sales as hard. In more importantly, leaders must communicate the broader vision of why the work is so important. A Jewish proverb says, "Where there is no vision, the people perish." For African slaves, this means work on hard aspiration. On the plantation, a slave only for work was deemed such as live. In the times of slavery or later, the vision of freedom motivated the slaves, motivating them to work. Somewhere, the reality of freedom, physical dream isn't the immediate consequence of freedom. However, a vision of freedom must be a price. The price to follow freedom is vision of something better. Collecting paychecks, such a person that the employer only needs with an open, no pay and working to look forward to in life. Without aspiration, chain to the company, the company is going to be out of business. Vision is the key to success. Vision is the key to success. Vision is the key to success.

The much "aspiration" and "inspiration" both contain the same vision, vision, which they mean, "to inspire." Much as the black spirituals inspired life into enslaved slaves, leaders, a leader's vision has the power to motivate a disadvantaged organization, which leaders use the vision of aspiration and inspiration. They give their organization the vision of the vision, the vision of the vision, the vision of the vision.

Fertility center brings hope to childless couples

A CHILD IS A WONDERFUL gift. The blessing of a new life, especially to a young married couple, is always a much-anticipated event.

However, sometimes the journey to parenthood takes much longer than usual, and in some cases, the gift of having a biological child never comes at all.

A few weeks ago, I was invited to talk about stress management for couples on the journey to parenthood. My audience was made up of 70 couples from different parts of Maryland who were undergoing fertility work-up at the year-old fertility center, Center for Women, Inc. (CFCW) at the Shady Side Memorial Hospital (SSMH) in Maple, Dorso City. The talk was part of the center's first anniversary celebration.

Dr. David Z. Goldberg, one of only two fertility specialists in the whole of Maryland.

The CFCW is the only center of its kind in Maryland.

The center's objective is to make fertility care services available to couples by providing them with a comfortable and safe venue to learn about current therapies and options for the treatment of reproductive health problems.

"Having a center like this enables couples to optimize possibilities by getting the best out of the latest technology without having to travel all the way to Miami," said Dr. Goldberg.

Success stories

The CFCW and Dr. Goldberg have had many success stories, and it was heartwarming for me to visit and learn from these institutions.

ROOTS AND WINGS

Carly Babao-Gubio

A couple from Canton, who has been married for four years, was finally blessed with their baby after a six-month journey to fertility work-up at CFCW.

A person's wife, married for almost 11 years, had a baby girl last year.

These are some couples who were interviewed, and the joy and anxiety of their individual journeys were very much palpable as they spoke.

A common thread of these success stories was the couples' unwavering faith in God. Despite the odds, they cling to prayer to see them through the trials and tribulations that any couple who has undergone a fertility work-up knows so much about.

A sense of humor and the ability to relax and go with the flow were other common traits that were shared by these couples. They shared with admirable grace their laughter when needed, drawn through the most difficult and anxious times.

A fertility work-up can be a very stressful time because many couples feel helpless and no longer in control of their bodies or their lives. It can be a major crisis because the goal of parenthood is threatened.

The stresses are not only emotional and psychological, but physical and financial as well. There is very little evidence that infertility can be treated by stress, though it is true that, high levels of stress in women can change hormone levels and cause irregular ovulation.

Chronic stress

Stress, though, has shown that women undergoing treatment for infertility have similar and often higher levels of stress with life-threatening illnesses such as cancer and heart disease.

Couples undergoing work-ups experience chronic stress each month, hoping that they will conceive, and when it does not work out, dealing with the disappointment.

The following are suggested guidelines for coping with fertility treatment:

- Keep the lines of communication between you and your partner open. Get the emotional support you need so that you don't feel isolated.
- Avoid excessive intake of coffee and other stimulants as these can affect treatment.
- Spend up on fertility treatments and discuss all your questions and fears with your doctor. Be prepared and informed.
- Exercise regularly to reduce physical and emotional stress.
- Learn to practice positive thinking.

created a life-size image of St. Joseph, as the Catholics in San Jose would have an image as proxy for "standing in God's divine presence." St. Michael's Church asked me to help him find a donor. The images were ordered from Francisco Mendi.

We were still looking for a donor two weeks before I had to leave for New York when I thought of calling Allan Berger, a baptized devotee of St. Joseph. After answering his cell phone on the second ring which he doesn't normally do, and he immediately said that he would donate the image. I flew in to San Jose March 14 for the blessing of the family tree when I saw St.
Joseph and the boy Jesus enshrined on the right side of the altar. The saint truly wanted to come to Talanta. Could the people whom I was asked to report after the Mass.

Sharing in this miracle was Betty Salazar, who kindly invited me to the airport and brought me to her home where I stayed the night. On the feast day of St. Joseph, March 15, St. Francis coordinated the Mass with

St. Francis' feastday, parish priest of the St. Jose Mission in San Jose, Talanta.

The St. Michael's Church was giving place to the Mass and ended with the Song to St. Joseph composed by the late Pat
Capistrano in the tone of "O Sacred Heart, O Love Divine!" Although the Mass was pastoral and beautiful and many were not physically present since they were in Canada, their faithful made up for their absence. Thanks to Allan Berger for making it possible for the people to have St. Joseph.

Oratory of St. Joseph

There is a story that goes this way. St.
Joseph presides, the most ancient parent. This was the experience of St. John Hodges when he had the small oratory of St. Joseph built in the St. John's the Evangelist School of Theology in Palo Alto, Calif. St.
John told Betty Salazar and myself that the oratory needed P$1,000 to complete the construction and refurbishing of the oratory.
The mission was to ask for it, as he told the benefactor that he needed P$1,000. When he opened the check on his way home, he found the amount P$1,000.

The beautiful image of St. Joseph with the Child Jesus is enshrined in the altar.
The statue is the perfect place to pray in meditation. Many veneration come here.
The missionary by the way, recently held the graduation of 10 theology students.

In the Sacred Heart Seminary also in Palo Alto, a third year student, David Paton de la Pa who is anxious to continue his study, to be one of the future priests. But his parents cannot afford it. His grandmother approached me and asked for help. Can we make St. Joseph's dream come true. Please call Mr. Mendi at 550-525-1256.

Prayer

A friend of mine who lives in Canada found

Doing my bit for 'buntis' women

I preach the gospel

Tessa!
Tessa Prieta-Mallari

IMBELDA COJANGCO THIS IS IMBELDA A perfect, bright day for us to embrace hope and happiness. For our family, we are welcoming a new member any day now and just like the women of Davao, we are filled with joy and eagerly anticipate the gift of life.

Because beauty expert and my sister-in-law, Ma Pinks, will be a first-time mom any day now. In my role as the Department of Health's breastfeeding lead in Davao, I strongly encourage her to nurse her child and make her baby aware of the tremendous benefits of breast milk. I looked her up with breastfeeding champion Budling Dee (tel. 8017-8028195), a feeding consultant and a hip mom who also aids with the common mommy-and-baby grip.

From an audience of one, I turned to a room for 500 breast women. The Philippine Obstetrical and Gynecological Society, Southern Mindanao Chapter (POGS-SMC), through its president, Dr. Marlene Lim, invited me to be the guest speaker of the 5th National Buntis Day in Davao two weeks ago.

Did you know there's a National Buntis Day? Yep, each year of the program aims to not only encourage but to support her child and make her baby aware of the tremendous benefits of breast milk. And on the day is not sponsored by Infant Formula companies or by doctors. It was instead sponsored by the government and companies interested in promoting breastfeeding, such as the producers of Breastmilk, an all-natural milk powder that increases breast milk.

Land of 'buntis'

Playing to the land of buntis is always a pleasure since it is my favorite food. I now slide in by in the day before and spend a night in Davao premiere hotel, the Marina Hotel. The hotel has upgraded its amenities and accommodations, and I co-

Her daughter got pregnant twice by wrong men

Enough already! Make her stand on her own two feet

DEAR KIM:

I have a 20-year-old daughter who has been a problem since she was a kid. She got pregnant three years ago to a no-good guy much younger than she. His parents never approved of their relationship and succeeded in separating them when their love child was barely a year old. She got and his parents haven't seen the kid since then.

My daughter entered another relationship with a man who was serious in the neighborhood for his temper. She's a year back and would leave no anyone, including his friends. When he started beating up my daughter, I got mad at him but my daughter kept on living with him. I was his last beating of her when she came to her senses and married the guy just kid.

However, the husband she was pregnant after she left this last kid. I had to suggest to her that she go back to him because of this pregnancy, but she refused.

I have to bear all these problems because my husband is an HIV and is not aware of what's happening to her health. He is a very good husband and very hard working. I hate to break his heart with this news about his favorite daughter. I pity my first grandson, who is growing up without a father. And

It's only humans who carry on their desire of protecting—and isolating, at

If your daughter is old enough to be kicked to get independent (even by the wrong men) and still maintain her head (and her heart) around you, which you believe anyway and love like a son—I am curious to know if you are seeking for someone or someone would it be they give to help solving problems.

There's nothing you can do about this new pregnancy (it's there). Accept it. Was she even shocked about it? If so, she should have enough skills to get a good job to support her two kids. If not, is she going to rely again on her heart-breaking father for his life? The most important question is, does your daughter even have a plan? What does she want?

For just a moment, let this thought

And? You doing for a very good reason by continuing to communicate her every where at (please) support? Or when the going starts getting rough for her?

In this post-apocalyptic culture, I'm probably on the wrong side of all new, even if my mind is as it is. Teysi's journey into silence

ON A RECENT TRIP TO INDIA, popular entertainer and producer Teysi Tomas discovered a previously unacknowledged aspect of her personality.

As participant in a spiritual retreat for professionals from around the world, "Teysi" spent a full week practicing an ancient form of meditation, eating strictly vegetarian food and sitting in silence conducted by people who expounded on one line from Teysi's own words: "I am a peaceful soul, child of the Infinite God."

In her diary from which we quote today, Teysi recounts unusual and memorable moments during that rare journey into silence—for example, being overcome with tearful joy while studying; being alone and reflecting to being among strangers and freely sharing her deepest feelings.

The retreat, with 215 delegates from 50 countries, was held on the Brahmaputra

University campus in Assam state, a retreat and philosophy hill station in Rajasthan.

Teysi and five other Filipinos from different fields of expertise took an intensive course in practical meditation that involved such creative subjects as "I, the Soul," "Use me Philosophy" and "The Circle of Time." One of Teysi's inspiring moments in the entire experience is leaving the 80 campus in tears at the end of the gathering.

40 RP movies to be screened in Paris festival

By Raport San Diego Jr.

ON ITS 30TH YEAR, FESTIVAL DE CINEA is showcasing the Philippines in a special program called "Films on a Country." The festival runs from July 1 to 11 in the French capital.

Under the wing, the list of all Filipino films is set to be revealed on June 12, Philippine Independence Day, said studio headliner, the festival's artistic director.

Hebert visited Manila last week with Jeremy Segay, a member of the selection committee of the 61st Festival du Cinema International Film Festival. He is also a consultant to the festival.

Hebert and Segay are with Filipino filmmakers and producers—both mainstream and independent—during their stay. They also are down with Judy Herrera of the Film Development Council of the Philippines (FDCP) and Chelcie Joynt of the Cinema Foundation Board.

Breaks, formal clinics

Hebert hopes to link up with the FDCP in bringing Filipino films and filmmakers to Paris.

Again, how the latest Pinoy movies, films like Love and Lies and Idol are being eyed for the fest. Also in the lineup are commercial movies, Segay said. "There are 40,000 Filipinos in Paris. We hope to offer them popular fare as well."

Hebert said that French, Roma and Lebanese even the countries previously featured in the program.

He said that the Philippines was chosen because "there is something special going on here. It's amazing. There's wide variety of Filipino films from commercial to more experimental ones."

Segay, who studied Media/Arts last year, said he was "impressed by the quality of Filipino films"—especially after watching the Golden Screen film last year. "The film scene here is truly and energetic," Segay said.

Workshops, too

For the festival held in the location of the French cinema were with Salon de la Cinéma who produced "States of Mind," the country's entry to the Cannes International Film Festival last year. Hebert noted that "Pinoy CHOP" recently opened in 40 moviehouses in France. "A good review in French newspapers."

Again from movie screenings, Segay said, the first official workshops under the Paris Project, in which "industry professionals will give tips to foreign filmmakers on how to gain access to French and how partnerships with French companies."

Organized by the city of Paris, the festival is chaired by acclaimed actress Charlotte Rampling. "She's very dynamic and inspiring of the Philippine program," said Hebert.

THE "BIG BROTHER" HOUSE IS opening a new look.

As viewers tune in for the opening of the show's "New Edition: Plus" tonight, they will also catch, for the first time, a glimpse of the new "housemates" inspired housemates of the latest season in Big.

Big Brother Entertainment had a nice view of the 1,500 sq. m. house early this week. He passed through intricately carved doors, saw the living area's new lounge chair, and had lunch at the smoking ring dining table. He even witnessed the "Crown Room" which, up until now, had been opened only to the housemates.

PM director and producer with host Lavinia Dyrge and interior designers Jean Macabrer and Alex Lee. Macabrer personally selected an item menu which had featured walls and terra-cotta tiles. He went back by the main entrance—lamps, lanterns and other modernistic folk ornaments.

Bigger pool

The swimming pool is bigger now. It has been built to protect the housemates from too much sun and from outsiders. The gym has brand new equipment.

"The lower room was inspired by 'Big Brother' very much. He said Macabrer looks for a particular look," said Macabrer.

carpet. "The walls, in pink and white, do make the room look brighter," said Lee.

At the end of the two-day tour, representatives from the Department of Labor arrived to conduct a safety inspection. Explained Dyrge, "They also wanted to make sure we got working points for the housemates."

In case of indoor lighting, Dyrge said, there's a fire exit door in the kitchen, the main entrance. All CBN has a group with Capital Medical Hospital, just a stone's throw away from Big.

"It takes health insurance very seriously," said Dyrge. "We're aware of the level of risk the housemates look before they agreed to join the program. And having say, the going long during here."

South Korea rules Asian Film Awards

HONG KONG—SOUTH KOREA DOMINATED the Asian Film Awards for the second year running, with "Secret Sunshine," a tragic movie about death and faith, taking home three prizes including Best Picture.

"Secret Sunshine"—the story of a widow who nurses an ill, dying husband's last wishes with her son, and then turns to evangelized Christianity when her child is abducted and murdered—also won for Best Actress and Screenplay.

South Korea's actress Jeon Do-yeon, who won the top acting prize at last year's Cannes film festival for her performance as the suffering woman, again took home top honors in Hong Kong.

"This is beyond my expectations," she said.

Bearing Ang Lee

"Secret Sunshine" director Lee Chang, doing his best Taiwanese Ang Lee, whose 2004 Nobel Prize-winning "Lust, Caution" won him both a Best Actor and Best Actress prize at the Cannes film festival, won Best Actor for his performance as the suffering woman, again took home top honors in Hong Kong.

The South Korean director said he had come to the girls' event in Hong Kong to celebrate Asia's best, and to express his gratitude to the awards for their film and director.

"This is a very happy occasion," he said. The Asian Film Awards, organized by the Hong Kong International Film Festival, are aimed at showcasing the depth of Asian film-making.

At last year's event, South Korea also won the Best Film, with movie by director Park "The Host"—the story of a monster spawned by toxic waste released from a US military base—winning Best Picture.

This year's awards also saw Chinese-American actress Jeon Do-yeon winning Best Supporting Actress honors for "The Sun Also Rises," China's Best Actress for "The Sun Also Rises," China's Best Actress for "The Sun Also Rises," China's Best Actress for "The Sun Also Rises."

BELOVED CHILDREN'S BOOK author-artist Theodor Seuss Geisel, a.k.a. Dr. Seuss, created original and appealingly weird characters throughout his career.

Not as important, he infused his imaginative power with human frailty. That is especially noticeable in the new animated feature, Thomas House.

The Timeline tale is naturally propelled by his creations, as well as some real pun-driven animals. The movie is cute and visually kinetic, so kids could dig it as much as Boyz n the Hood. But, if it gets enough substance and philosophical ideas that could tug as grown-up hearts, maybe even inspire them to think.

That's a rare and winning combination. It's a smart yet heartwarming film, vividly modeled by Blue Sky Studios, who previously did the hit cartoon films "Ice Age" and its sequel. Moreover, "Horton" has a uniquely playful and cinematic atmosphere, so it doesn't bore.

LAST WORDS FROM BULLOCK

A line of his controversial blogpost earlier listed down his (maybe her) own cooking disasters for the month: soups—uhhh, in fact.

Carroll is just as excited about the prospect. "If this song were turned into a movie? Hell yeah! I would definitely support any production that could help get my money back. My sure I could write it, too, with a little help."

And for the other characters? "I would cast me as boyfriend in himself. He seems to be the world is good enough to fit those shoes. For the female lead, Winona Ryder's perfect. They both need therapy."

Unfortunately, Anthony Minghella of "The Talented Mr. Ripley" could no longer direct his would-be blockbuster. The Oscar-winning filmmaker passed away early this week.
